MUSC-1080

Craig Ferrin

The course project has allowed to me get out of my comfort zone, regarding listening to music. Usually, I listen to rock music that is sung in English, but for this project, I had to listen to something completely different. Chilean music is a genre that I am completely unfamiliar with, from different instruments to different style of playing, even a language that I cannot understand. However, after listening to Chilean music, I can have an appreciation for that style of music, the music may mean nothing to me, but for Chilean people, it can have a deeper impact on them. This course has taught me a lot about listening to music that I am not unfamiliar with, I've learned how to listen to music from different cultures with a different mindset, and how to break down what I'm listening to.
